

Qur'anic Reflections

This repository is a personal collection of reflections on selected Qur'anic verses.

I read verses from the Qur'an, pause, think, and write down what I understand from them.

Sometimes I use AI as a tool to help me organize thoughts, clarify language, or structure ideas — but the responsibility for meaning, intention, and accuracy remains mine.

These notes are not tafsīr in the scholarly sense.

They are reflections, observations, and lessons as I understand them at a given moment.

Purpose

- To slow down while reading the Qur'an
- To think carefully about meaning, context, and attitude
- To write reflections primarily for myself
- To keep a personal archive that is independent of social media

If anyone else benefits from these reflections, they are welcome to read them.

A note on humility and correction

These writings are fallible.

If you notice: - a misunderstanding, - an unclear expression, - or something that conflicts with the Qur'an's broader message, please take it as a limitation of my understanding, not the text itself.

I remain open to correction and refinement.

What this repository is NOT

- It is not a replacement for classical tafsīr
- It is not authoritative religious guidance
- It is not meant to argue, debate, or provoke

It is simply a space for careful thought and reflection.

Structure

Reflections are written in Markdown and organized by: - Surah - Verse number

Each file usually contains: - The verse (in English) - Contextual explanation - Reflections focused on attitude, meaning, and application

Intention

The Qur'an repeatedly reminds us that guidance is not blocked by questions, but by arrogance, haste, and resistance to truth.

This repository is an attempt — however imperfect — to read, reflect, and write with care.
